

Jacob Lattin
W6 Bivariate Map

In this map you can see that most of the black population in the United States lives in the southeastern area of the country while the hispanic population is a little more widespread in the south and western United States. There are pockets across the country where both populations overlap pretty heavily across the country such as in eastern Texas, North Carolina, and Florida. Neither one of these demographics have strong representations across the north east, midwest, or northern parts of the country.

Black and Hispanic Population, 2010

